APPENDIX A

Explanatory Notes for the Code of Conduct for Obtaining Information under Section 59A of the Housing Restructuring and Tenancy Matters Act 1992

Why have a Code?

Parliament has recognised the powers given to Housing New Zealand to compulsorily obtain information can be intrusive and should be balanced with a Code that governs the way in which those powers are exercised. The Code provides important safeguards to protect confidential relationships and to ensure fair procedures are followed.

Section 65A of the Act requires Housing New Zealand to issue the Code after consultation with the Privacy Commissioner and to publish it on an Intranet site that is publically available at all reasonable times or in a form that is accessible to the public. Copies can be obtained free of charge from any Housing New Zealand office or from the Housing New Zealand website at www.hnzc.co.nz

Information collecting powers

Housing New Zealand collects personal information about its clients in several different ways and for a variety of purposes. Sometimes the information is collected directly from the client on application form or during interviews. Sometimes informal inquiries are made of clients or of other people with authorisation from the client. Occasionally information is collected by using statutory powers.

Where Housing New Zealand is given special statutory powers to obtain information, these powers override the Privacy Act 1993.

Section 59A of the Housing Restructuring and Tenancy Matters Act 1992 permits Housing New Zealand to require any person to provide information for one or more of the purposes set out in section 59A(1) of that Act, and to require any person to provide advice as to whether or not any such information is accurate (refer section 59A(3)). Section 59A(1) and (3) are set out in Appendix 1 of the Code.

The Code deals only with the exercise of powers to obtain information under section 59A(1) and (3). It does not apply to requests for information made under other statutory or non-statutory powers.

4. Steps to be taken prior to giving a section 59A notice

Preliminary requests

Before giving a section 59A notice to any person other than the person him or herself, the information must first be sought from that person directly. If the information is about someone other than the:

- a) tenant or an applicable person in relation to the tenant
- b) applicant for or recipient of a financial product or the spouse or partner of the applicant or recipient
- c) prospective tenant or the person who would be an applicable person in relation to the prospective tenant
- d) former tenant or an applicable person in relation to the former tenant at the time concerned (refer section 57B(b) of the Act)

The information must first be sought from the tenant, applicant, recipient, prospective tenant or former tenant (as the case may be), and also from that other person (in compliance with the information privacy principle 2 of the Privacy Act 1993). These steps to obtain the information directly from the subjects themselves must be taken on every occasion, even in cases where it is unlikely that the subject will be able to provide the information, for example where that person does not have custody or control of the information, or the information is not "about" that person. The only exception is when compliance would prejudice the maintenance of the law in which case the section 59A notice may be given without the need for any preliminary requests

This is an informal process which provides the individual with the opportunity to provide the information themselves rather than having it sought from others. This provides some measure of privacy protection as well as ensuring that they are kept informed about the nature of the enquiries being made about them. The person does not have to comply with the request. The request need not be in writing – it can be made in person or by phone.

When a request is made, Housing New Zealand must comply with information privacy principle 3 of the Privacy Act 1993, which requires that the person from whom the information is being requested is advised of the purpose of the request, the fact that giving the information is (at this stage) voluntary, the consequences of not providing the information, who will hold it, and that the person has a right to request access to and correction of their information. These matters can only be omitted if the authorised staff member believes on reasonable grounds that one of the exceptions to information privacy principle 3 applies. If the person does not provide the information after a reasonable time then, subject to the restrictions on what can be asked for from whom, the authorised staff member can give a section 59A notice to a third party who the authorised staff member reasonably believes holds the information.

5. Giving of section 59A notices

The purposes for which a section 59A notice may be given are set out in section 59A(1) and (3) of the Act. Section 59A is reproduced in appendix B to the Code.

The term "working days" is defined in the Interpretation Act. A working day means a day of the week other than—

- (a) a Saturday, a Sunday, Waitangi Day, Good Friday, Easter Monday, Anzac Day, the Sovereign's birthday, and Labour Day; and
- (b) a day in the period commencing with 25 December in a year and ending with 2 January in the following year; and
- (c) if 1 January falls on a Friday, the following Monday; and
- (d) if 1 January falls on a Saturday or a Sunday, the following Monday and Tuesday; and
- (e) if Waitangi Day or Anzac Day falls on a Saturday or a Sunday, the following Monday.

If notice is sent to any person by post, then, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the notice is deemed to have been received by that person on the fourth day after the day on which it is posted. This is when it is 'given' for the purposes of the Code. In proving the delivery, it is important to be able to show the letter was properly addressed and posted.

The time period for complying with a section 59A notice can be extended from the minimum of 5 working days at the discretion of Housing New Zealand having regard to the circumstances of the case, including the volume of information requested and the manner in which it is stored or held.

The notice might specify the manner in which the information is to be produced. For example, it may require copies of documents to be produced, or original documents to be sent or shown to Housing New Zealand.

Information must be provided without charge to Housing New Zealand. (Refer section 59A(4)(b) of the Act.)

Apart from notices given to the person themselves, or to financial institutions, lawyers, employers or former employers of that person, or to departments, departmental agencies or Crown entities, no-one can be required to provide information unless there is "reasonable cause" to give a notice.

The circumstances that might give an officer reasonable cause to give a notice cannot be listed exhaustively, although examples are specified in the Act and repeated in the interpretation section of the Code.

There may be other statutory prohibitions on the release of information which are relevant in certain circumstances.

6. Limitations on what may be requested from specified groups

An authorised staff member seeking information will not necessarily be aware of the nature of that information, or the circumstances in which it has been obtained. For this reason, it is possible that a request for information, or a section 59A notice might encompass information in respect of which, if sought in court, the holder could claim a privilege to prevent them from disclosing it.

The Act makes it clear that a person who receives a section 59A notice requesting privileged information is not required to provide that information. It is not always clear whether a privilege will apply, and the grounds are quite limited.

If there is a dispute about whether the information can properly be considered to be privileged, the matter can be decided by a District Court Judge.

Any recipient of a notice who believes that such a privilege might apply to the information that has been required of them should immediately advise the authorised staff member concerned of the nature of the privilege they are claiming.

7. Further limitations on what may be requested.

Limitations on enforcement of section 59A notices

As discussed above, the Code imposes a number of restrictions on the types of information that may be required from certain persons. As a general rule no-one is required to provide any information that is legally professionally privileged or would be privileged in a court of law. This includes the privilege against self-incrimination and may include the privilege relating to special relationships of confidence, such as between doctor or psychologist and patient, priest and penitent and others. See Evidence Act 2006.

What are the safeguards against misuse of the powers?

Authorised staff may obtain information only where they are permitted to do so by law. All staff are obliged to maintain the security and confidentiality of all information that they handle as a result of their duties. Information cannot be disclosed to other agencies except where required or permitted by law. Any staff making unauthorised requests or disclosures of information may be subject to disciplinary action and possible criminal prosecution.

Within Housing New Zealand, access to personal information is limited to those staff who need it for the purposes of carrying out their work. A number of controls exist to safeguard access to and retention of information. Housing New Zealand operates a suite of policies setting out the requirements and expectations of staff, assurance activities occur around management controls, and technology systems have defined permissions and access rights for individuals.

Complaints

Complaints about the use of these powers may be made to the General Manager, Tenancy Services. Complaints about a breach of the Code may be made to the Privacy Commissioner, who deals with them as if they were complaints about a Code of Practice under Part 6 of the Privacy Act. The Code may be amended at any time after consultation with the Privacy Commissioner.

9. Application of Information Privacy Principles

The Information Privacy Principles (IPPs) apply to almost all agencies and their handling of personal information. Housing New Zealand must comply with these principles.

This means, for example, that information must not be collected by unfair or unlawful means (IPP4), must be stored safely and securely (IPP5), must be accurate and up to date (IPP8).

However, some aspects of the Act and the Code override the information privacy principles. For example, the power to obtain information from a third party overrides IPP 2. The power to seek information from a third party also involves disclosing certain information. For example a request for financial information from a bank will coincidentally disclose that Housing New Zealand may be investigating that person. Such an incidental disclosure will not be in breach of IPP 11, because Housing New Zealand is expressly authorised to take actions that will result in such disclosures.

Nothing in the Code or the Act affects an individual's right to seek access to or correction of personal information held about them by Housing New Zealand in accordance with IPPs 6 and 7.
